The role of state and non-state actors and organizations. Students also look at the causes and effects of population movements including push-pull factors, refugee and internally displaced persons flows. Students study the play in shaping today's world: emigration, immigration, displacement, revolution, and middle-power and small-country leadership; regional diplomatic missions abroad and within the United Nations system; and emerging non-state actor alternatives to state-based moral leadership; and revolutionary and post-colonial leadership; individual leadership at grassroots level by diplomatic actors working in multiple vocations, including businesspeople, scientists, artists, religious leaders, community organizers and activists. Students will engage the phenomena of poly lateral and omnilateral diplomacy, and their implications for promoting collaboration among governmental and non-state actor diplomats. As our conceptions and practices of what it means to be a leader has evolved, so have the ways in which we practice diplomacy. This course will introduce students to the origins of diplomacy and the manner in which it has evolved as a practice and as a field of study through the end of the 20th century, through examining the evolution of Club Diplomacy to Network Diplomacy, modern understandings of statecraft, negotiation, and liberal internationalism. This course examines the practice of diplomacy through an examination of non-Western state-sponsored diplomacy and the practices of non-state actor diplomats. Students will become acquainted with the many ways the field of diplomatic studies has expanded in recent decades, and will be introduced to the growing number of approaches to the practice of diplomacy which are broadening our understanding of who can be called a diplomat.

This course will introduce students to the theory and practice of diplomatic mediation and negotiation in multiple vocational contexts, including the work of foreign service officers, non-state actors and grassroots diplomats.

This course examines the practice of diplomacy at the grassroots level by diplomatic actors working in multiple vocations, including businesspeople, scientists, artists, religious leaders, community organizers and activists. Students will engage the phenomena of poly lateral and omnilateral diplomacy, and their implications for promoting collaboration among governmental and non-state actor diplomats.

As our conceptions and practices of what it means to be a leader has evolved, so have the ways in which we practice diplomacy. This course will introduce students to the origins of diplomacy and the manner in which it has evolved as a practice and as a field of study through the end of the 20th century, through examining the evolution of Club Diplomacy to Network Diplomacy, modern understandings of statecraft, negotiation, and liberal internationalism.

This course will introduce students to the theory and practice of diplomatic mediation and negotiation in multiple vocational contexts, including the work of foreign service officers, non-state actors and grassroots diplomats.

This course combines formal class work and independent research. Students will engage a theme in diplomatic studies which reflects their own vocational trajectory.

This course is supervised by a member of The Grace School faculty.

This course examines the history of diplomacy, the modern state of diplomacy engaging both normative and critical interpretations, and the possible futures of diplomacy through a transprofessional lens, including urban diplomacy, diplomacy and public health, diplomacy and human migration, diplomacy and critical ethnic studies, the critical analysis of diplomacy, and diplomacy and public service.

This course will introduce students to the theory and practice of diplomatic mediation and negotiation in multiple vocational contexts, including the work of foreign service officers, non-state actors and grassroots diplomats.
DPL 402 | CITIZEN DIPLOMACY IN THE 21ST CENTURY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)
This course examines the practice of diplomacy at the grassroots level by diplomatic actors working in multiple vocations, including businesspeople, scientists, artists, religious leaders, community organizers and activists. Students will engage the phenomena of polylateral and omnilateral diplomacy, and their implications for promoting collaboration among governmental and non-state actor diplomats.

DPL 421 | MIGRATION AND FORCED MIGRATION | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)
This course examines the integral role that different processes of mobility play in shaping today's world: emigration, immigration, displacement, refugee and internally displaced persons flows. Students study the causes and effects of population movements including push-pull factors, demographic, economic, and political variables. Students also look at the role of state and non-state actors and organizations.

DPL 422 | CULTURE AND INEQUALITY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)
This course interrogates the concept of culture by showing the dynamic ways in which inequalities define and shape it. Students examine theories of culture and different approaches to studying culture to understand the relationship between the construction of cultural difference and social inequalities.

DPL 423 | NATURE, SOCIETY AND POWER | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)
This course is an interdisciplinary exploration of environmental issues pertinent to international studies. The reproduction of human societies occurs in a symbiotic relationship with the natural world, yet in the modern era nature has come to be increasingly conceptualized as a resource. This course explores the repercussions of this instrumental separation of nature from culture and society. Our conceptions of nature range from the physical environment to the human body; and the course explores a range of related political, economic, ecological, and socio-cultural issues from theoretical, comparative, and practical perspectives. Issues explored include those of environmental justice and social and political equity, and questions such as who defines what constitutes environmental issues, who is included or excluded from environmental concerns, and who benefits or is harmed by environmental changes occurring as a result of social interventions.

DPL 495 | SPECIAL TOPICS | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)
Focused study on a specific topic which is complementary to the study and practice of Applied Diplomacy.

DPL 498 | INTERNSHIP | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)
This course is supervised by a member of The Grace School faculty.

DPL 499 | INDEPENDENT STUDY | 4 quarter hours (Graduate)
Student-designed course incorporating reading and research conducted under faculty supervision.