

HISTORICAL INQUIRY

Courses in the Historical Inquiry domain study human life in past societies (primarily pre-1945) as a process of continuity and change over time. Many of the documents that mediate the past to us have considerable aesthetic or intellectual value in and of themselves. However, courses in this learning domain examine texts, art works, and other forms of evidence less for their aesthetic or intellectual value than for their usefulness as tools for reconstructing aspects of the past and building sensible, defensible, and well-informed historical interpretations about the past and about causation in the past. Students generally take two courses in the HI Domain Area.

Learning Outcomes

Students will be able to:

- Demonstrate a depth and breadth of historical knowledge of specified content by:
  - Explaining historical developments in terms of continuity and change.
  - Describing the relevant political, economic, social, and/or cultural contexts of historical events and developments.
  - Explaining how people have lived, acted, and thought in one or more particular historical periods.
- Demonstrate historical skills by:
  - Analyzing and evaluating primary and secondary sources.
  - Differentiating between historical facts and historical interpretations.
  - Articulating a historical argument.
  - Supporting an interpretation with evidence from primary and secondary sources.
- Demonstrate historical thinking by:
  - Articulating how geography and regional differences affect the past.
  - Interpreting the complexity and diversity among issues, events, and ideas of the past.
  - Distinguishing among multiple perspectives that shape interpretations of the past.
  - Using the categories of race, gender, class, ethnicity, region, and religion to analyze historical events and developments.
